

➤ Gain Creators

Gain Creators involves how your products and services impact customers. What benefits does your product have for customers? Has it met their expectations? Are they happy using your product or service? When considering what your product or service does for your customers, you wish to determine what's most important to them and how often it is expected to happen.

Restaurants

Creates
Gain

1. Good Taste
2. Hygienic Food
3. Social Value of Dining Out
4. New Cuisines
5. Convenience

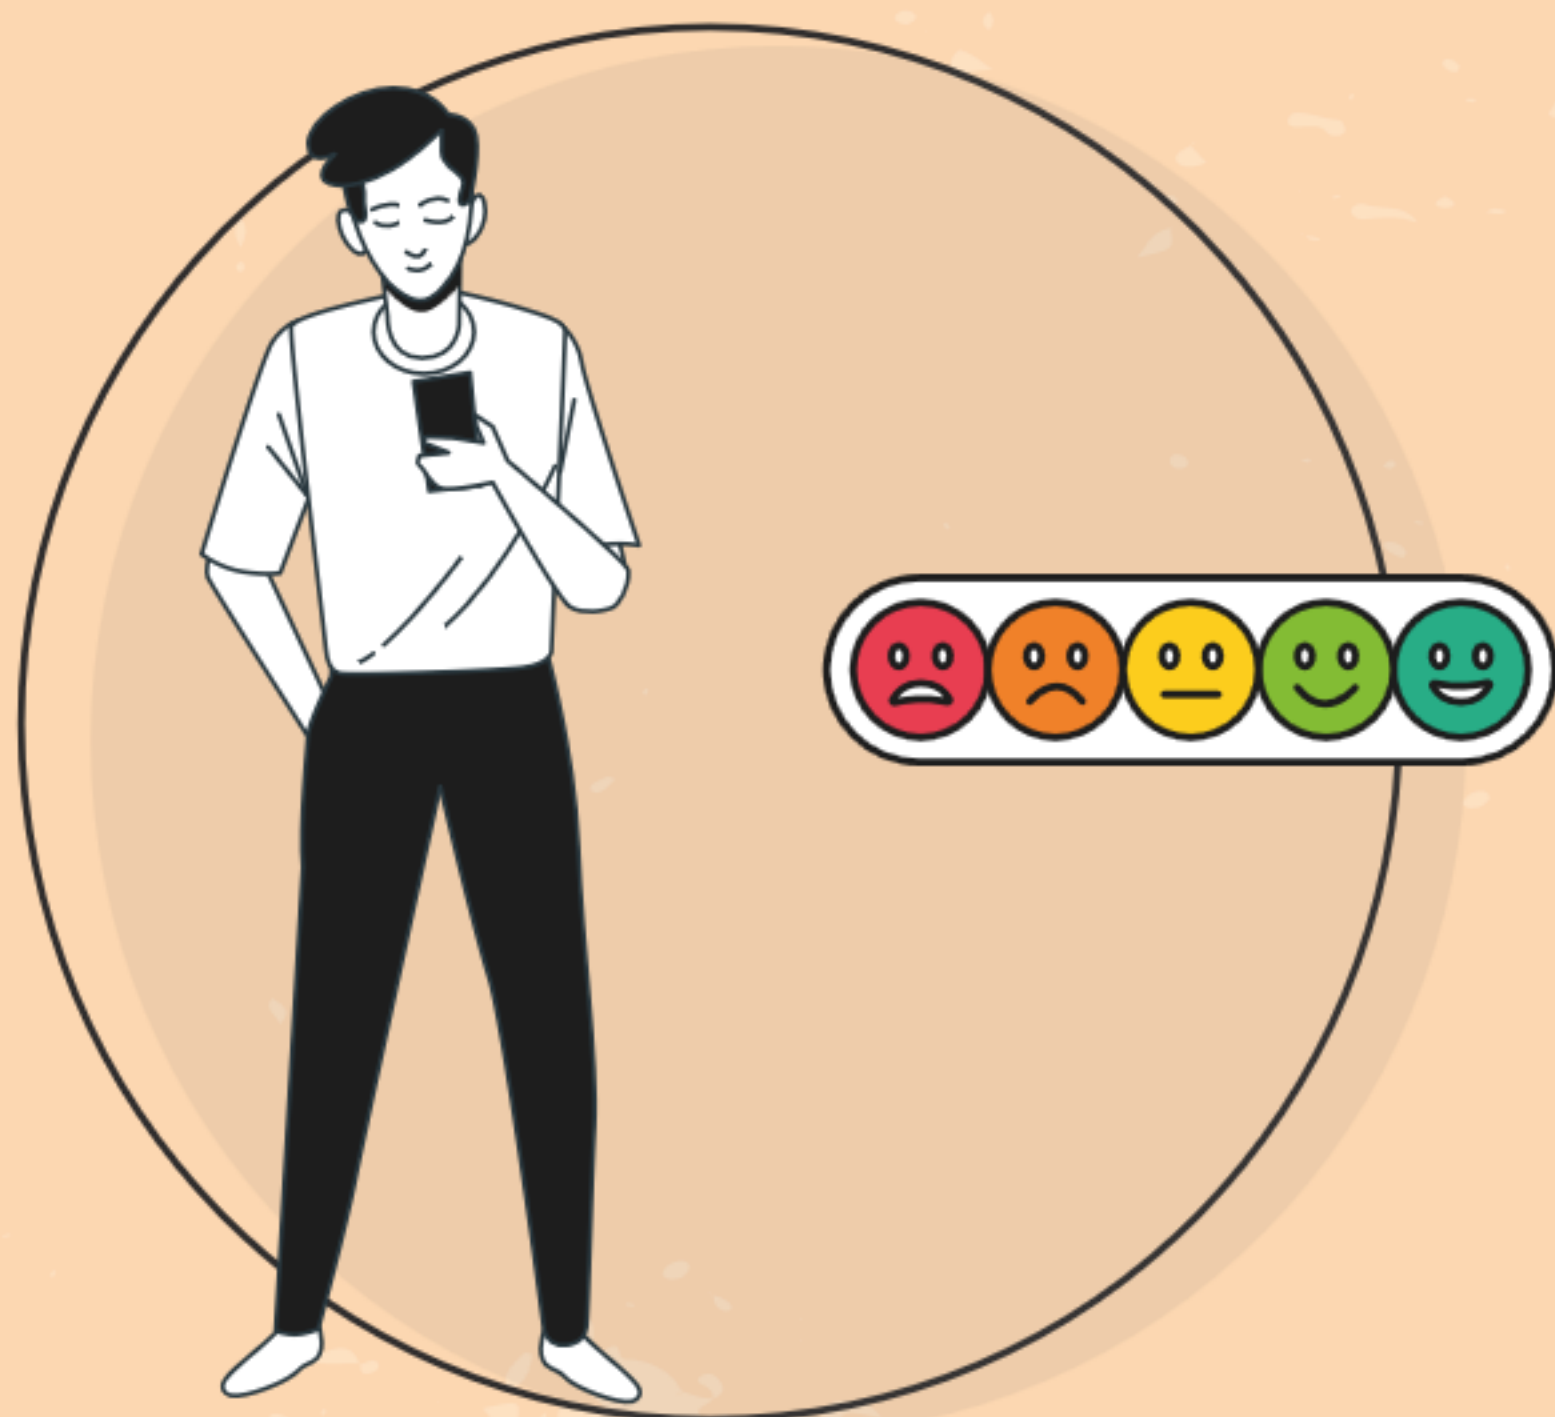

Where to Source the Information for VPC?

There are two main types of research methodologies when studying Clients, Customers, or Users: qualitative and quantitative. Quantitative research focuses on numerical data and measurable insights, while qualitative research delves into the subjective experiences and perspectives of end users.

This can be done by:

➤ Primary Research

Primary research involves directly engaging with end-users to gather information. Here are some methods/tools you can use:

Surveys

Ask users objective questions and utilize Likert scales to check if your solutions address their pain points effectively.

Interviews or Focus Group Discussions (FGDs)

Conduct one-on-one interviews or group discussions to learn about users' emotional and subjective experiences with your product and gain valuable insights.

Observational Research

Observe users as they interact with your product or solution. This allows you to identify potential gaps or areas for improvement and generates new ideas for enhancements.