

Example: Developing a Hotel Booking App

1. Remove Non-Essential Features and Address Key Customer Pain Points

By understanding the needs and pain points of customers through the VPC, businesses can identify factors that are not essential to their target market. By eliminating these factors, businesses can simplify their value proposition and allocate resources more effectively towards meeting the most critical customer needs and pain points.

2. Eliminate factors which are over-supplied by competitors

Businesses can eliminate those factors that are over-addressed by competitors in the market. In this way, businesses can eliminate overcrowded markets and instead focus on those problems that are solved by fewer competitors or on areas where they can differentiate themselves more effectively.