

➤ Product-Market Fit

Product-market fit happens when you can see that your idea or solution is really working for customers. Your value proposition, which you offer to customers, is genuinely making their lives better by solving their problems and giving them the benefits they want.

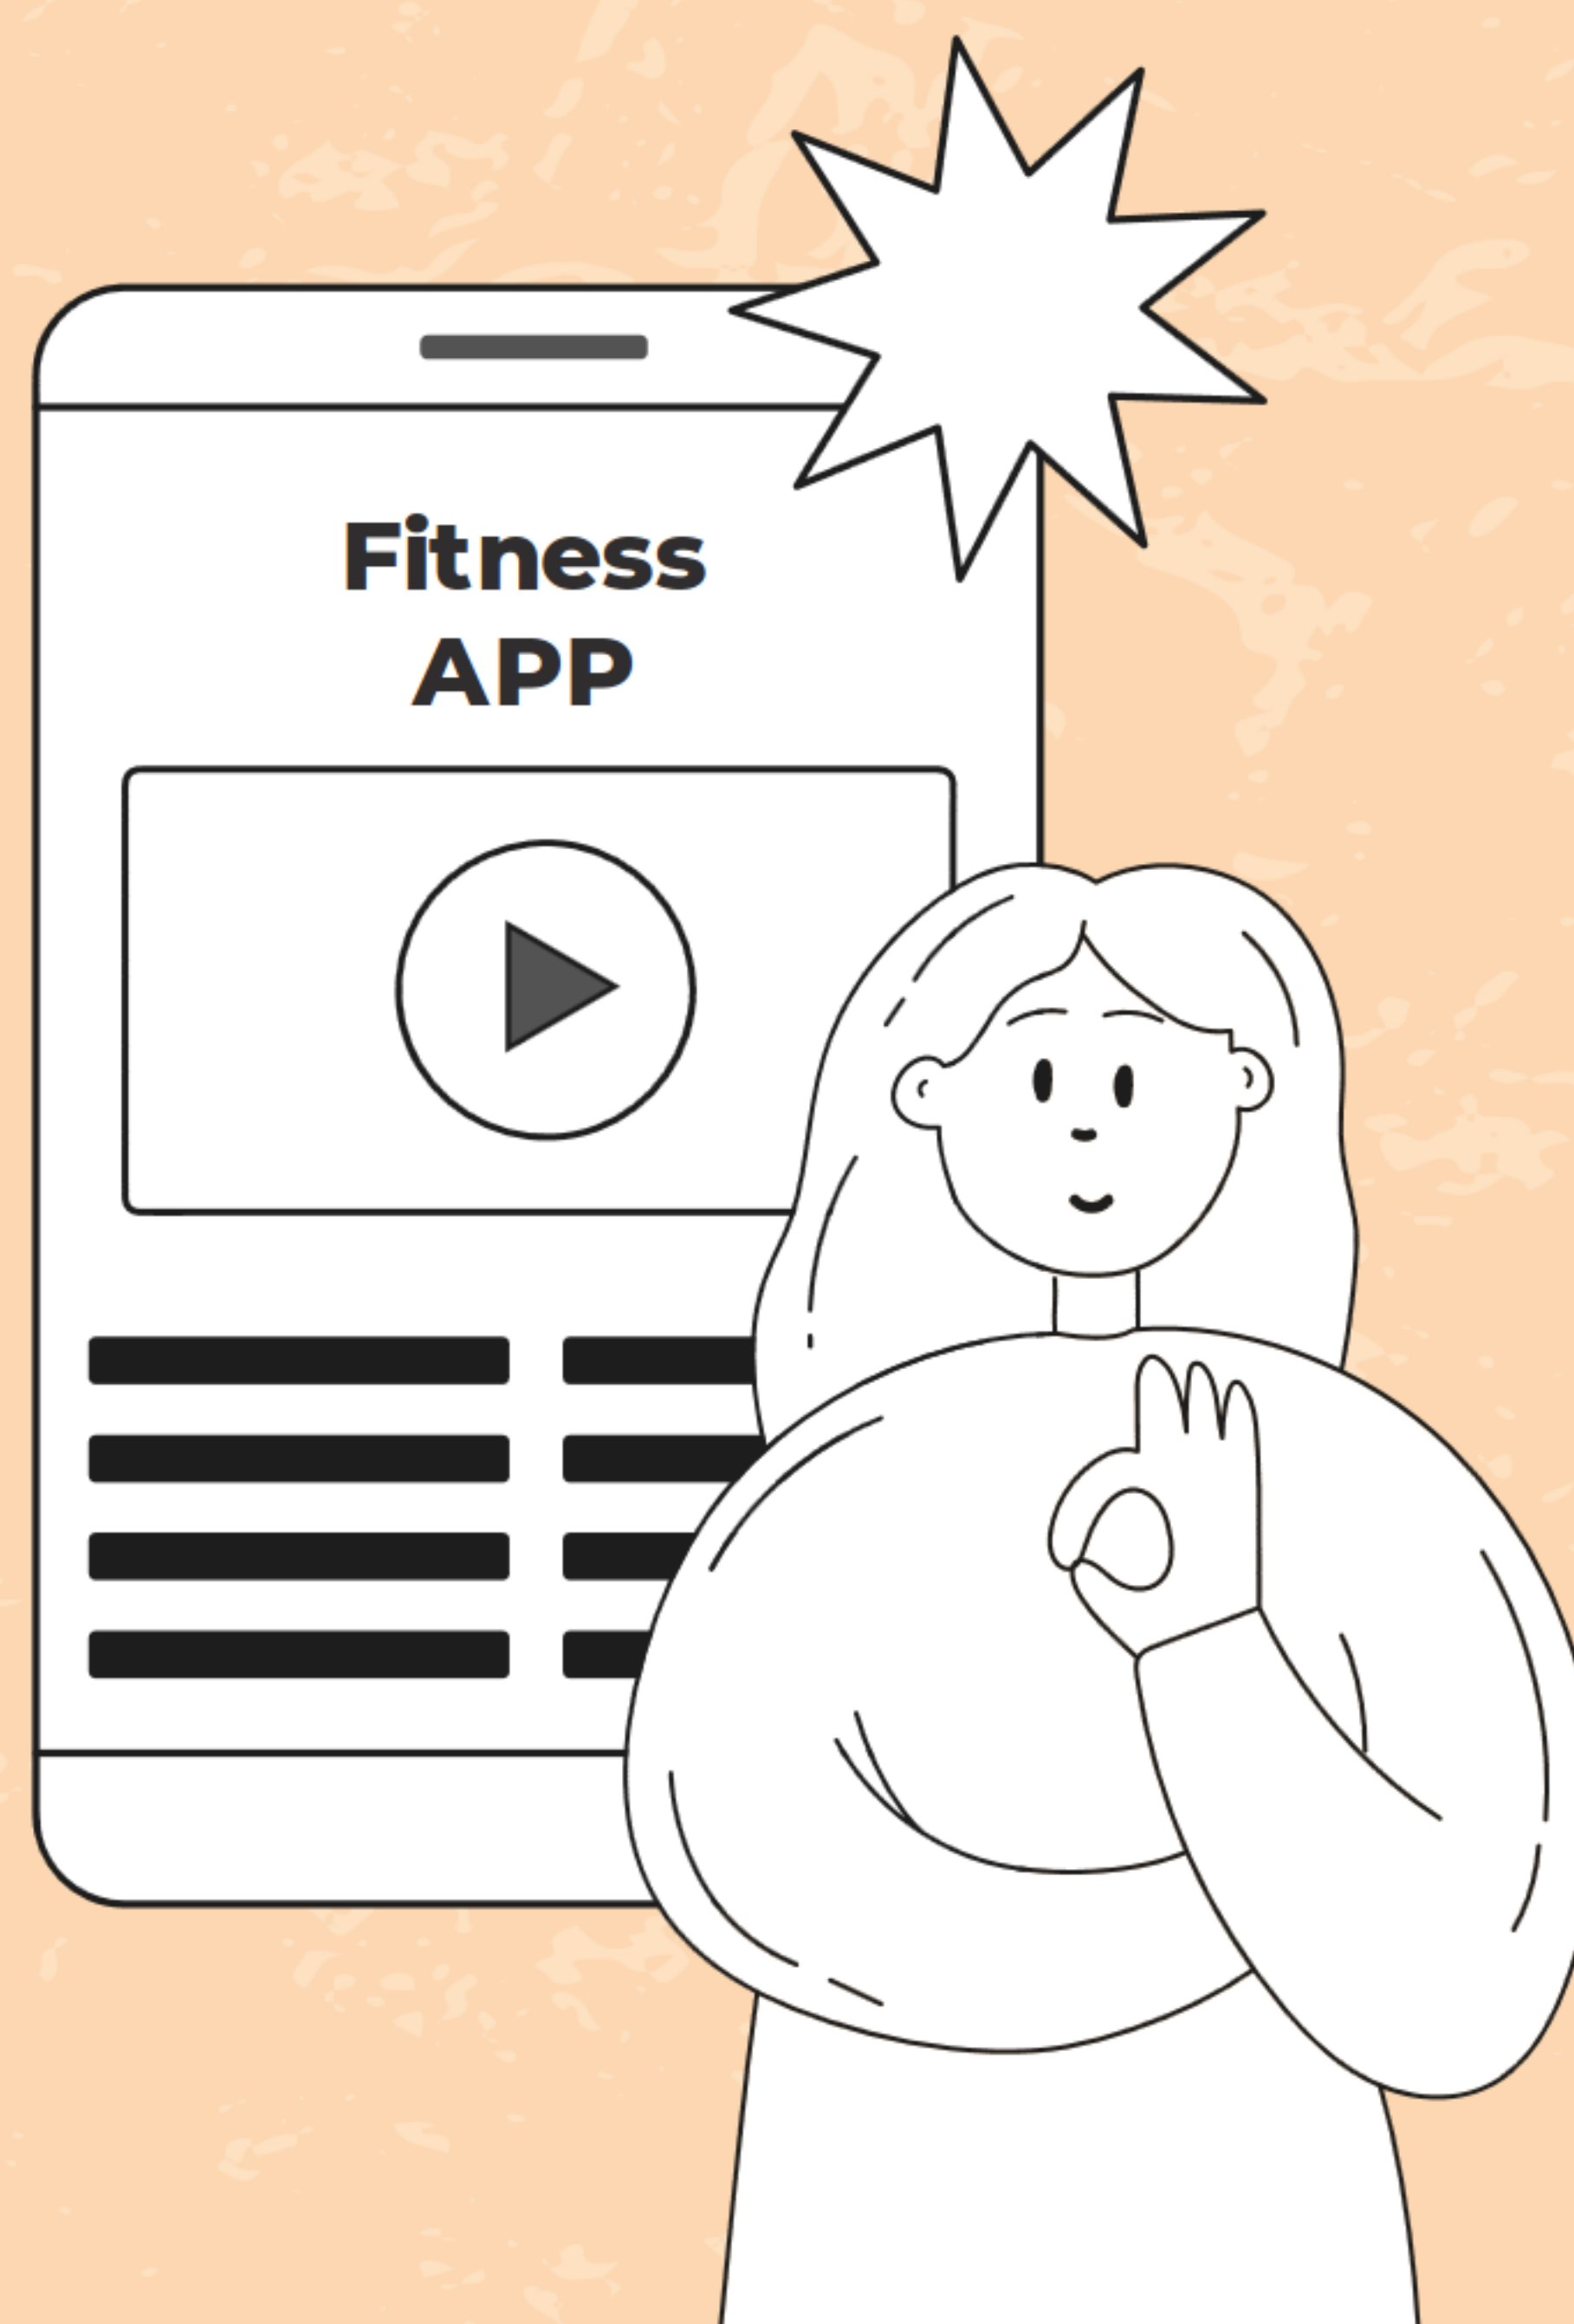

Your product or service is starting to go viral on the market, and you've spent a lot of time testing it to make sure it's right. You've tried different things; some worked and some failed, but now you're confident that you're on the right track because customers are responding positively. For example, the prototype of the fitness tracking app is being tested.

Gym enthusiasts are the initial target audience for testing the prototype.

Based on the initial reviews and feedback from gym enthusiasts who use the prototype, the app's fit with the user's needs and preferences can be analyzed.

The app's success can be checked by evaluating the gym enthusiasts' likability and willingness to continue using it. The feedback gathered helps determine whether the app solves the problem of accurately tracking calories for gym enthusiasts or not.
