

➤ Business-Model Fit

Business model fit is when you have confirmed that your idea not only helps customers but also makes a profit for your business sustainably. You've put in a lot of effort to create a value proposition that attracts customers and a business model that makes sense for your organization. After trying and testing different ways and making adjustments, you've got the perfect balance where your product or service creates value for customers and brings in profits for your company.

To assess if your business model fits well, consider the following points:

Market Size

This refers to the overall size of the market your product or service is targeting. Is it a large market with many potential customers, or is it relatively small with limited opportunities? If the market size is small, growth is slow, and there are various players locally and globally, or if your solution is primarily suited for local use only, it's generally advisable to avoid investing in such solutions.

For example-
