

2.5 Validating Your Value Proposition – Minimum Viable Product (MVP)

Prioritize Building a Great MVP—But Don't Delay the Launch – “Fail Fast to Fail Safe”

It's essential to focus on creating a solid MVP (Minimum Viable Product), but don't get stuck in the process and delay launching it. Remember the saying, “Fail fast to fail-safe” Move forward and launch it. Even if the product has many imperfections, launching it there can bring you valuable feedback from your early users.

Being exposed to your products helps users understand your product better, and the feedback you get becomes a valuable starting point for improvements. So, embrace the idea of launching quickly, even if your product isn't perfect—it's all part of the journey towards building something great.

So, fail fast to fail safe
