

3.1 Do You Really Need a Co-Founder?

This chapter focuses on the concept of exploring a co-founder while building a team.

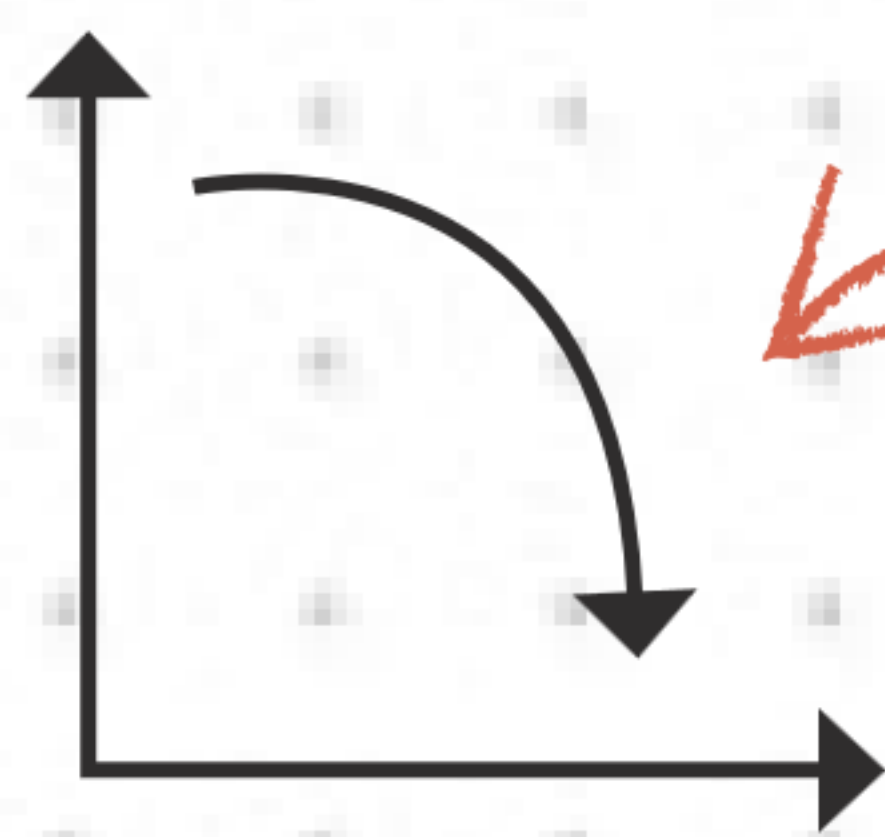

1. Exploring Solopreneurship: When Can It Work Well?

Having a co-founder is sometimes seen as a key to success, but is it really necessary, or is it just a myth?

Some investors avoid investing in ventures run by solo founders.

Because they think that solo founders may not be as flexible and open to exploring new ideas.

This rigidity could make it difficult for the business to grow over time and adapt to changes in the future, which is crucial for long-term success.