- They may choose to work alone to save time, as decision-making can be slower with co-founders. If many people are involved in the decision-making process, then reaching a consensus can become time-consuming. So they prefer to make decisions by themselves and navigate them accordingly.

Slow Decision Making

Faster Decision Making

- Sometimes founders do not prefer to establish an equity share structure at the initial stage of the business because of the uncertainty of the business; it gives them flexibility; deciding on equity shares at the initial stage can lead to conflicts; or they prefer to first build the business instead of focusing on the equity share structure.
