

Start Hiring and Reach Out to the Network

As discussed earlier, it's better to bring on board someone you know or have worked with before. This helps to build trust and familiarity, and you may already know how to work together well, which can enhance decision-making in the initial stages.

However, if you are hiring external candidates, then make a priority as to which candidate to choose. As discussed above, you should go for those who match your and your co-founder's values. So, creating a team that aligns with your values and brings complementary skills can build a strong foundation for your startup and increase the chances of success in the early stages.

