Public Sector Banks in India:

These banks often offer the most favorable loan terms and lower interest rates. However, their processes can sometimes be slow and cumbersome.

Private Sector Banks in India:

While private banks might have slightly higher interest rates, they are often more efficient in disbursing loans and accommodating requests.

NBFCs (Non-Banking Financial Companies):

NBFCs typically have the highest interest rates. So, only if you don't get a loan from a bank you should consider NBFC's.

Your choice of lender will depend on your preference and eligibility. Having a pre-existing banking relationship with a particular institution can sometimes make the loan application process much smoother.
