

When both you and your co-applicant apply for a joint home loan, the lender checks both your credit scores and income profiles. Based on this collective assessment, you might be eligible for a higher loan amount than if you applied individually. Plus, both of you can enjoy tax benefits, making it a win-win situation.

Other than close relatives, who else can be a co-applicant?

Individuals who are co-owners of the property can also be a co-applicant. Here, usually 4 to 6 people are allowed.
