

The Money Guide

2008

We believe that we are making decisions rationally based on facts; however, more often than not, it is not true. We make decisions emotionally and then find pointers to support them.

Our decisions are often biased by the experiences we have had and what people around us are doing.

A lot of people lost money in the stock market during the 2008 financial crisis, and since then, it has usually been said that investing in stocks is a gamble. Either they experienced it or heard their elders belabour about it.

An illustration featuring two men in a conversation. On the left, an older man with grey hair, wearing a white and brown patterned sweater, holds a yellow mug. On the right, a younger man with dark hair and a beard, wearing a blue patterned sweater, also holds a yellow mug. They are both gesturing with their hands. The background is a light grey grid with a faint, stylized stock market candlestick chart in red and green. A speech bubble from the younger man contains the text: "Stock Market is a gamble! Be careful!".

Stock Market
is a gamble!
Be careful!