ii. Non - Cumulative FDs:

With this option, you receive your interest earnings at regular intervals, like monthly, quarterly, half-yearly, or annually. This is great if you need a steady stream of income. The catch here is that you won't enjoy the compounding effect of your interest getting reinvested.

So, it's all about what suits your financial goals. If you want your money to grow over time, choose cumulative. If you need regular income, go for non-cumulative. Each option has its pros and cons, so pick the one that's right for you.
