

Even professionals who do this as their day job often make the wrong bets. Hence, as an individual, if we are not willing or don't have the time to learn about the fundamentals, it is always better to go to professionals to get specific recommendations on which stocks you should invest in and how you should make a stock portfolio.

So, if you're considering investing, take your time to learn and seek advice from knowledgeable individuals. Investing can be compared to solving a puzzle, and by strategically placing the right pieces, you can gradually increase your wealth over time.

Since investing in direct equity is a vast topic, it can be a book itself. Hence, this topic falls outside the scope of this Book. However, if you are interested, you can explore the following Books:

- One up on Wallstreet
- Common stocks and uncommon profits
- 100 Baggers
- Value Investing and Behavioural Finance