

discovered a way to profit off the excess good deals. She started a business that includes making custom decorated ladies bathroom toiletry baskets for Bar and Bat Mitzvah's and weddings. She uses coupon-purchased items like free nail polish and inexpensive or free sanitary napkins or tampons to fill her baskets.

CORI

Cori Nadler of Coral Springs, Florida, used to just dabble a bit in couponing until January 2011 when she realized she had to make a change in the amount of money her family of four was spending on food. At the time, they spent 150 to 200 dollars a week, and she wasn't even sure what they were buying. Her 2011 New Year's resolution was to save as much money as she could with coupons, and soon she was hooked. Couponing turned into a new career for her. When she began sharing deals on Facebook, her good deal alerts went viral and soon she started a fan page, "Cori's Coupon Corner." Formerly a teacher, it was only natural she started teaching couponing workshops.

"I love the thrill of winning at the savings game," Cori says, "My daughter plants herself at the end of the checkout lane so she can watch my total go down. She high fives me when it gets really low."
