

when someone gave him hundreds of Huggies and Pampers peelie coupons. He posted his bounty on Facebook and ended up sharing batches of coupons to friends who could use them. Then he needed them himself. He and his wife had their first child in October 2011, and now their couponing centers on infant products.

Derek's money-saving ways extend further than just the coupon binder. He joined a Crop Sharing Association to enjoy locally-grown foods and to cut down on monthly costs for produce. His wife cans and jars fruits and vegetables to preserve or to give as gifts. Alongside their stockpiled cans from the grocery store are jars of peaches, apple butter, homemade relish, and more homegrown goodies. Derek is a strong believer in recycling and passing on the savings. Besides the local food bank and shelter, he has shared with family members and once brought dozens of free Gatorade to his wife's cousin's football team. Even the newspapers he pulls the inserts from get recycled when he brings them into the animal shelter for animal bedding.

Paul Woods of Bald Head Island, North Carolina, started couponing in the 1980s while he attended college. He credits his father's sage advice to "always try to save money" for getting him started. Couponing fit fine into that philosophy. After college, he met his future wife on the Prodigy Interactive Service couponing bulletin board. They have four children and
