

keep a stockpile of free and cheap products on the mainland. Because Paul is self-employed as a consumer consultant and his wife works full time as a hospital administrator, most of the coupon clipping is left to Paul and the kids.

Paul says the power shopping trips “jazz him up.”

“It makes me feel empowered. I have all this free stuff, and I see people ahead of me paying two hundred dollars for their cart full of items, and I only pay ten dollars, most of which is tax.”

Do these people sound like “crazy couponers” or just everyday smart shoppers who like to get the most for their hard-earned money? They might not typify the average shopper, but they are representative of the avid couponers I know.
