

couple in my imaginary scenario, but ours was a true couponing love story:

ROMANCE AT EDGETON'S SANITATION

Our eyes met across the newspaper recycling bin as our hands brushed against each other's in our search for the glossy coupon inserts amidst the piles of newspapers. My heart beat faster and my cheeks flushed red with excitement. After fifteen years, this man knew the way to my heart. He smiled as he handed me a huge stack of uncut coupons, and smiling more broadly, he pulled a Motrin IB box from his coat pocket. "Look what I found in the cardboard bin," he said excitedly, "And I bet there is more where that came from."

Sound like a trashy romance novel to you? Write what you know, successful authors advise, and I know what it's like to have a husband who not only supports my hobby, but who also believes I'll have a book published by the time I reach forty. Most of us have some type of support system in the form of a spouse, a parent, a refunding sister, or our regular traders who visit us via the mailbox. If we are really lucky, we live with our supportive person. I'm one of those lucky enough to have a spouse who thinks refunding is both fun and profitable.

Pulling an old curtain rod from the back of his maroon station wagon, David deftly cornered a forty-two-load ultra detergent box in the cardboard bin, flipping it over the side with one twist of his muscular arm. My knees trembled and my heart raced as I saw him reach deep into the large bin for yet another treasure to warm my heart. Dimly I was aware of another car approaching the site. I busied myself unloading my own box of recyclables, keeping an eye on David, who continued to look through the cardboard-filled bin, oblivious to the well-dressed older couple who'd pulled up in their van.
