

$30,000 and $60,000, with the over $100,000 income group coming in a close second.

Interestingly, by March of 2010, this same site ranked 40,820 and reached approximately 40,000 unique viewers. The demographics of race, age, and income remained about the same. This increase in viewership and ranking likely reflected the downturn in the economy and the increased interest in couponing in those three years.

Another website that analyzes website traffic, Compete.com, reported 52,220 unique visitors for RefundCents in April 2010. WeUseCoupons.com went from 80,906 unique visitors in April 2010 to 156,866 in January 2011. Stephanie Nelson, of CouponMom fame, boasted an extraordinary 992,229 unique visitors in January of 2011, proving that a large segment of the population is indeed interested in saving more at the grocery store with coupons.

Despite the fact that men do use coupons, there is still a gender difference; according to an ongoing survey of women conducted and commissioned by Fleishman-Hillard and Hearst magazines, women outpace men by 10 to 20 percentage points on most measures. The study, "Women,
