

ages of eighteen and seventy-six go online (with 68 million using social media) at least once a week, and that blogs are twice as likely as social networks to be used to learn about new trends, ideas, and products.

Companies are carefully studying the influence of the increasingly popular blogs. With nearly 80,000 new blogs launching every day, marketers are looking for those bloggers who are the most influential in regards to recommending products and services. A public relations firm such as Access Communications can help companies decide which bloggers have the most influence in the world of the Web. Access Blog Influence Engine (ABIE), a web-based application that provides an accurate, comprehensive view of true influence on the web, can also offer a clearer insight into how to foster stronger blogger relationships. ABIE contains ranked lists of dozens of categories of blogs, including detailed profiles of more than 5,000 of the most influential bloggers.

Ilana Westerman, CEO and co-founder of Create with Context, a digital strategy consulting practice, and Elisa Camahort Page, cofounder of BlogHer, studied women shoppers in their “Women, the Web, and Their