

Disclaimer

I am not a lawyer. That is no secret. I also am not an idiot. Some may like to debate me on that, but I know when people are being taken advantage of, and when it is happening by people that they think they can trust, something needs to be done about it.

Because of the success of my past books, I have been the subject of intense scrutiny. I have been called the “epitome of the snake oil salesman,” a “quack,” and a “flim-flam-man.” One internet blogger has called me “Satan.” Maybe that’s why I can take the heat.

Think of me what you will, but the facts exposed here are what I believe to be the simple truth. The solutions are bona fide concepts that can get you out of debt and on your way to wealth. There is no hocus-pocus happening. This is not a shell game. The federal government and the banks and the credit card companies are ripping off the American public, plain and simple.

I tell you what I see happening and I tell you what you can do about it. These are easy techniques that anyone can do. I am not an attorney, a financial planner, or an accountant. You should check with those professionals before you take any of the steps outlined in this book. They will probably want a copy of this book for themselves.

As with everything in life, things change! The government, the credit agencies, the banks, the credit card issuers, they seem to always be making changes to laws and policies. You should be aware that information in this book may change, so you’ll need to check for any updates!

Examples and stories are used to illustrate the methods available. Names, amounts and numbers are fictionalized, but the facts do not change: you can get out of debt and you can create wealth. It is my purpose to enlighten you and to provide you with an interesting book to read. Enjoy.
