

can take advantage of this, use the methods talked about later on to get the money to pay it off. It is worth it, now and for your financial future!

Increase It

Increase your credit score with a quick call to the credit card companies! For every card you have, call each one and ask that they increase your credit limit. This request is usually much easier for them to agree to than any other request you might have; they assume you will charge more on your account and that means more bucks for them.

You know how to make phone calls. What a great method that anyone can try!

You do want the increase in your credit limit – not to make more purchases, but to boost your credit score more. Your credit score improves dramatically if you do not use all of your available credit. The fastest and easiest way to accomplish this is to get more available credit. All you have to do is ask! By not using all of your available credit, your credit score can go up as much as 50 points!

Spread It

Play the spread! If the credit card companies won't increase your limit (but most should), spread out your debt among all your credit cards. You want every credit card to show the highest possible available credit. The FICO score system only wants you to use 30%–35% of your available credit on each card, so attempt for that amount. The credit card may give you a credit limit of $1000, but you should only charge $300.

It may seem silly, but play their game. Spread out what you owe, so no one card has a high balance. Do not max out your cards. Use this simple technique and your credit score can greatly improve!

Pay It

To get your cards down to that 30% or 35%, can you pay off some of the balances? Instead of spreading the balances around, maybe you can pay some down. If at all possible, pay off your cards, or get them down to a low balance. Get each credit card to the magic 30% level. I'll help you find the money to pay them!
