

You do not need supernatural powers to vanquish the consumer lending industry or to get your debt back in control. There are basic steps to take, everyday common sense stuff. And then there are these secrets that I am exposing in this book. The creditors and lenders want to keep their devious tactics to themselves for one reason only: money. If you know how they operate, you know how to beat the system.

These “magic word” sets will work for a great number of consumers. If, however, they don’t apply to your particular situation, there is still the legal route out of debt – bankruptcy. Bankruptcy is a totally legitimate, legal option, so do not feel ashamed if you have already filed for bankruptcy or are facing it right now.

When all else fails, you should consult with legal and financial advisors. If they decide that bankruptcy is viable for your situation, consider their advice. There are hundreds of thousands of folks each year who take this route out of debt. And maybe there are even more “magic words” out there. Readers are sharing their success stories. Maybe you have one of your own, with your own set of magic words.

Take Control

I know that many of us find ourselves getting frustrated with the system. We get angry, and the two words that we want to say cannot be printed in this book. Swearing at your banker or creditors may release some tension, but it does not have any real effect on improving your finances.

The way to take charge is to take control.
