

Military:

The Army National Guard has a student loan repayment program, which can be as much as $10,000. Veterans, their dependents, and those interested in careers in the military should check out <http://www.finaid.org/military/>.

Legal and Medical Studies:

For those who are willing to serve the public, some law schools will forgive their student loans. See <http://www.equaljusticeworks.org/>. Doctors and nurses who work for a certain length of time in needy areas can get loan forgiveness through programs offered by the US Department of Health and Human Services. See <http://nhsc.bhpr.hrsa.gov/> and for nurses, visit the site at <http://bhpr.hrsa.gov/nursing/loanrepay.htm>.

Occupational and physical therapists are in demand, and loan forgiveness is a recruitment tool. See <http://www.apta.org//AM/Template.cfm?Section=Home> and <http://www.aota.org/>. Any medical students interested in possible loan repayment programs should check out http://services.aamc.org/fed_loan_pub/index.cfm?fuseaction=public.welcome&CFID=7086849&CFTOKEN=264504b-ee8d996b-6b94-4aac-8449-0362f3450d85.

Something New

Something new that has just come along is the College Cost Reduction and Access Act of 2007. It is a new loan forgiveness program to encourage public service, geared for people who will make a low income but who have decided on a career in public service. Their salary and their student loan debt can be polar opposites, so to keep people in these low-paying but very necessary jobs, the government has devised this program.

Ten years of full-time employment in public service is required, and during this time, the person must make the monthly payment on their student loan. The beginning date of the program is October 1, 2007. After 120 payments and ten years of service, any remaining student loan debt is discharged. Obviously, this program is only beneficial to those who have loan terms longer than ten years.
