

your elected officials, and if they think their job is in jeopardy, they may listen to you.

As your elected representative, they have a duty to you, and you have a duty to them. If you do not voice your complaint, then nothing will ever happen. Make your complaint heard. Speak up. Write. A staffer will read your letter and it may just get thrown into a pile, but if that pile gets big enough, then something will get done. If the suits in Washington start getting enough complaints, they will have to do something about it. If we don't complain, they can sit back, light another stogie, and keep on doing what they have been doing – nothing.

Email and snail mail addresses are available at: www.house.gov and www.senate.gov.

3. Banking Regulators. Their mailing address is: Division of Credit Practices, Bureau of Consumer Protection, Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D.C. 20580; or file a complaint online at: www.ftc.gov.
4. Better Business Bureau. Contact them online at: www.bbb.org.
5. Comptroller of the Currency. Their phone number is: 202-874-4700.

It is the right thing to do to complain, complain, complain. Credit card companies get away with their outrageous behavior because too few of us hard-working consumers complain. If your senator received hundreds of letters from consumers threatening to vote him out of office, he will sit up and listen. The squeaky wheel sometimes gets rewarded, so start squeaking.

Your voice, and
your vote, matters.

What to Say

Contact your elected officials and inform them of what the credit card company did to you specifically. Don't give a general rant against corporate America. Give your story of how their greedy practices are hurting your everyday life. "My credit card company raised my interest rate to 22%.