

Stealing Candy from Babies

“Monsters are real.”

~ Stephen King

The American consumer is in deeper debt than ever before in the history of the United States. The amount of debt grows by $2 billion each day. I cannot even fathom that. Are we a nation of wealth, or have we become a nation of citizens who are oppressed by the banks, the mortgage companies, the credit card corporations, the department stores – the entire consumer lending industry?

The competition for the consumer pocketbook is at an all-time high. Because the lending industry is drunk with power and thirsty for fees, they have broadened their markets to be able to reach into even more pocketbooks. And under mattresses. And into piggy banks.

The Age of Reason Is History

Long ago, in a galaxy far, far away, a customer had to be deemed a good credit risk in order to get a credit card or a loan. If a person had a bad credit history, then the reasonable thing to do was not give him money until he could improve his credit and learn how to manage his money. Decisions were made based on sound business practices, not
