

to fight back. If you, or someone you know, are the secondary name on an account, the time has come for credit in one's own name. In the eyes of those passing credit judgment, every man (and woman) stands alone.

Have your wife, your mother, or your college student get a credit card in her own name. Make a few small purchases and pay them off right away to establish a good paying history. Opening the account itself is not enough; there has to be activity for it to enter into the scoring system. The next car purchase should be in her name, even if you have to co-sign. Or have her take out a small personal loan at the bank and of course make the payments timely. This will establish a good credit score under her name and not as a piggyback rider.

I agree that this change made by FICO and welcomed by the banks and the credit card companies is not fair. The big guns don't play fair. The system is geared in their favor and to keep the American public under their thumb. It's all part of the great American rip-off. Millions of people, women especially, will feel the brunt when their credit scores take a nose dive, through no fault of their own, simply because the rules were changed.

One credit reporting agency will begin using the adjusted FICO calculation in late 2007, and the other two bureaus will in 2008. Take hold of the reins now and help yourself and those you know establish good credit in their name now.

Get $500 (or More) of Credit Instantly!

Talk about frustration! I've told you "if you have credit card debt, if you can't get a credit card, I can tell you how to instantly get a credit card. You could have a credit card and $500 instant cash money." And I told you how to do it. You could have been added to someone's account and within a week would have a card in hand and the ability to get cash, and of course have the benefit of that good credit which would boost your credit score. It wasn't magic, but it was as good as a miracle: no matter your credit condition, you
