

student to get in over their heads, and to walk out of college already deep in debt. The student card requires that the parent co-sign, and the card usually has a credit limit of no more than $1000. The idea is for the student to get used to having a credit card, learning to be a responsible consumer, and still have a safety net. It is sort of like a practice credit card, and in order to apply, you have to really seek it out. This card can be a good way for a student to establish a credit report and a credit score.

Give the Gift of Good Credit

The regular credit cards that students get at their schools can do the same, if they learn to use it wisely. There are many discussions that parents have with their children as they grow up, and how to use credit is just as important as the birds and the bees, and the “just say no” to drugs speech. Parents need to be educated about the credit card industry, and they need to inform their children.

The Gift That Keeps Giving

There is no better gift to give someone than helping them with their financial health. If you help your kids learn to avoid the traps that the consumer lending industry has waiting for them, they can maintain a debt-free existence and get on to building wealth.

For your friends and your family, and for yourself, there is no better gift. Money does not grow on trees. It grows because we have learned how to make smart choices and how to fight back against the credit card companies, the banks, and the mortgage companies. They are the poison, the weeds that want to choke out prosperity. They want it only for themselves.

The steps and techniques outlined in Debt Cures are like weed-killer, or like the antidote to the snake’s venom. We are not destined to be held under their power.

We are destined for wealth.
