

Starting Out

Get a business bank account. Many people want to mix their business funds with their personal funds. Bad idea. Maintain separate accounts. You are probably wondering how the nuts and bolts of getting started actually happens. In the words of a famous shoe company, you just do it.

A little effort can grow into the ability to have $1 million at your disposal. I hear you ask: Where do I begin? First check under the couch cushions and in your jacket pockets for lost coins and bills. Cash in the penny jar on the kitchen counter. Then open your mind and get creative.

Borrow

Borrow from yourself. If you've got it, use it. Any cash in the bank, in stocks, or any investments will serve you well by helping to start your corporation.

Borrow from friends and family. Quite often, there is a trusted friend who sees the possibilities when others sometimes choose to feel the fear instead. If this person believes in you, enough to loan you some money, you need to believe in them! As we mentioned earlier, money borrowed from friends and family does not hit the credit report, and they don't hit you with outrageous interest.

Borrow against something you own. If you have something of value, you can take out a loan using that item as collateral. You can take a personal loan, using your car as collateral. If you don't pay the loan, the bank takes your car.

Home Equity

Borrow against your house. Your home is usually your biggest investment and your largest asset. You can take out a home equity loan or line of credit and use that cash to build equity in your business. Often the interest rates are good, and again, the interest would be tax deductible.

Using your home equity is quick and easy, and can add up to a sizeable amount of cash. Most lenders let you borrow against the equity you have in your home. To figure out your equity, you need to know what your
