Uncollected Funds

An obscure way to raise quick cash is to find uncollected funds you never knew you had. There are databases on the internet that list refunds owed to people. Oprah covered this on her show once, and it is estimated that nine out of ten people are owed some money. The websites state that there is $400 billion in unclaimed money that belongs to the American people.

These internet sites profess that the state of New York has unclaimed bank accounts and security deposits that total over five billion dollars, and California is sitting on over three billion dollars of other people's money. The United States Treasury has unredeemed savings bonds, old ones, that amount to $1.3 billion. American Express has an extra $3.8 billion, due to all the traveler's checks that have been issued and not cashed. The Internal Revenue Service issued tax refunds over the years, totaling $25.6 million, and these people have not cashed their refund checks!

There may be money out there with your name on it. Many times, it is small rebates from manufacturers that never made its way into your hands, but it is your money just the same. There is free money waiting to be collected. Perhaps some of it belongs to you.

Sue went on the internet and searched for uncollected funds. She discovered that she was owed $230 from Bed, Bath and Beyond. She collected the cash and put it toward her dog grooming business. Little checks all add up.

Entrepreneur

Too many people put the cart before the horse. They put the product or service out there without understanding if there is actually a need or a want for that product or service. Supply and demand makes sense, so use it to your advantage. Whatever people are demanding, that is what you want to supply. Far too often, folks think they have the greatest gadget and then they have to spend their energy trying to get people to want it, to create the demand. It needs to work the other way around.
