Did you know about the Adoption Tax Credit?

There is also a program run by the Federal Transit Administration that can be of great benefit to you if you're having trouble transporting your child to a specific location. The program is actually geared toward providing free transport to seniors and those with disabilities. Within the FTA's "guidance document" (C9070) on the topic, there is language that plainly states that free transportation can be used by other parties if they can demonstrate that an unplanned event has left them in a bind. So, if your child is suddenly left with no way to get to school or to the doctor's office, and there's nowhere else to turn, you should try to take advantage of the free transportation available. The FTA hands out millions of dollars a year to local groups in order to fund this free service. That's a lot of money, and if you need the assistance, you shouldn't hesitate in seizing the opportunity. Learn more at www.fta.dot.gov. You can also call them at: 202-366-4020.

And how about adopting? Do you plan on adopting children in the future? If so, you probably already know that adoption can be costly and that you might need a little extra help. Organizations like the National Adoption Foundation can give you the financial assistance that you're looking for. It provides grants, not only to be used toward adopting a child, but toward raising a child as well! Learn more at www.nafadopt.org.

Did you know about the Adoption Tax Credit? You can get up to $10,960 in tax breaks! That's a big chunk of change! There are a variety of adoption expenses that qualify, and you can get all your information here: www.irs.gov/taxtopics/tc607.html.

More and more companies today are offering adoption benefits to their employees. They're realizing how adoption is becoming more common with each passing year, and they want to help you ease the burden of your costs. Check with your employer to find out what your company is offering, and if they aren't offering anything, talk to them
