

debt, do not claim it as yours. Instead, use the word “alleged.” It is simple. You do not think that it could be your debt, so by using the word “alleged,” you never admit that it is yours. Ask the collection agent to send you all their information on the “alleged” debt because it does not sound at all familiar to you. When did the “alleged” debt occur? What was purchased? The collector gets the point that you do not think it is yours, and you are allowed to ask questions without placing the debt on you. You can ask all the questions you want about something that doesn’t exist!

Tip #3 – A reinforcement of Tip #2. This is a two-part tip.

The first in rhyme: When a debt is old, you can be bold.

However you want to say it, just point blank tell the debt collector that the statute of limitations is expired. They can’t collect. Then you hang up. How simple is that?

The second part of the tip: Don’t ever agree, and you can set yourself free.

It can be as easy as that!

Tip #4 – Be confident that the Debt Cures methods work! It is 100% possible to eliminate 100% of your debt! That is 100% encouraging. Know your financial situation, and know your rights. With this technique, you can eliminate your debt, no matter how much you previously owed!

It is always a power struggle, so the more you know, the more power you have over them. Know if your debt is expired. And remember, you can always ask point blank, “How old is this alleged debt?” Find your state below and know the time period it takes for debts to disappear. Financial freedom starts right here.

Find Your State

Miranda’s credit card company wrote off her $3000 account five years ago. Miranda lives in California, where the statute of limitations is four years, so she can tell the debt collector these beautiful words, the debt elimination sentence, “The statute of limitations is gone, baby! Do