

If the credit card company decides to sell your account balance to a collection agency, they may not recover your full original balance. It is highly unlikely that they would get that much, probably just a portion of it. You could be offering them the best deal that they are going to get out of you. It doesn't hurt to ask, so you have to give it a try. It can help you save thousands of dollars of unnecessary debt!

Actually, this exact situation just happened to one of our loyal readers, Jocelyn. She was deep in debt, to the tune of $33,800. Her husband saw the infomercial late one night and wanted to give Debt Cures a try. Jocelyn was a bit skeptical, but bought Debt Cures to appease her husband, and she admits that she was curious.

Jocelyn read the book and put it to use right away. Armed with these tips, she picked up the phone, took a deep breath, and demanded (very politely, of course) to speak to a manager. She explained that she could not ever pay the whole balance, but before they transferred her to debt collectors, she wanted to work with the creditor directly. She offered to pay a portion of her debt, the only amount she truly could pay. Much of the total was interest and fees that had accumulated.

The manager did not immediately say yes, but after some back-and-forth, Jocelyn whittled her monster debt of $33,800 to three miniscule payments of $1,800! One phone call saved her close to $29,000! She got a return on her investment in Debt Cures almost a thousand times over! Those are the success stories I love to hear!

Jocelyn, like most of us, used to be scared stiff of debt collectors. But after reading Debt Cures, she now realizes how she can work the system to her benefit. She shared her story and states, "It allows me to talk with creditors and not allow them to harass me. They don't even call me anymore!"

It Works

After paying her rent and car payment, and food and the bare basics, she was tapped out. With credit card bills skyrocketing every month, due to the interest and late fees,
