

In the fall, Andrea accepted a teaching position with a private school, and they began to settle into a reasonably normal routine. Over the course of three months they counseled with Mike McKenna once a week. During that time they learned how to balance and maintain their checking account and how to develop a realistic budget. In the fourth month Mr. McKenna called Bill to ask if he and Andrea would be willing to meet and coach another young couple the pastor had sent to him. Bill asked Andrea, who wholeheartedly agreed, and they began their first one-on-one coaching to help another couple.

Bill ultimately finished his master's work and went on to get a PhD in music. He now heads a department at the university where he and Andrea attended school. They lived with Andrea's mother for about a year and a half, during which time they helped her get started on a budget. During that time Andrea's mother also trained for her new career in practical nursing, which she could afford to do only because of their financial assistance for nearly four years. Bill and Andrea's financial recovery was possible only because they faced their problems honestly and worked through them together.
