

Often we have the mistaken idea that more money will solve our financial problems. Bud—and others like him—is living proof that more money can easily result in bigger problems. Men who invest in high-risk deals that fail often transfer the blame to other people. Since the family is the most readily available scapegoat, they are the ones who usually receive the blame. “I was doing it to better provide for my family,” the man says. Nonsense. He did it because it fed his ego and was a chance to get rich quickly.