

2. Each month continue to meet the obligations established by the bankruptcy court. With Ben and Naomi's combined incomes, they were able to pay at least the minimum amounts due.
3. Make a budget showing what they could afford to pay for housing. This showed how totally out of line their housing expenses were with their income. They decided to sell the house, and because of a decline in housing values, they received just enough to cover what they owed. They paid off their mortgage and began renting until they could get back on their feet.
4. Assign Naomi the task of managing the books in their home. She would pay the bills each month, and she and Ben would review the budget together at least once a month.
5. Once the bankruptcy payments were completed, make a budget that they could live with.

After three years, when the last creditor was repaid, Ben and Naomi used her income for several months to repay the tithes they had not been able to pay before. Their coach, Bryan, told them that as far as he could tell, Scripture did not require or suggest a repayment of past tithes and offerings. After praying about what he said, they still committed themselves to repaying their tithes as a testimony that God truly was first in their marriage.
