

furthermore, I'm pretty sure we can pay you a good bit more than what you're earning now."

When he got to the car, Bud called Sandi. "Honey, this is truly an answer from the Lord. Thank you for teaching me about trusting Him."

"We've both learned to trust Him," she said. "Thank You, Jesus."

To conclude this particular couple's story, Bud did such a good job at the bank that eventually he was promoted to asset manager of the holding company's properties. It took quite awhile, but the IRS debt was finally paid off, and Bud and Sandi could look back on the whole series of events as something for which they were now grateful. They had grown closer together, learned to depend on God's grace, and their children saw firsthand how people who had committed themselves to the Lord could persevere through difficult times, trusting that God would provide.
