The application of ChatGPT in supporting therapies has been researched widely, especially for applications like mental health support and companionship for isolated individuals. ChatGPT, by mimicking human conversation, could help ease loneliness and provide some emotional support.

While ChatGPT is not a replacement for human contact or professional therapy, it can complement those services by simply being there to hear people. Sometimes, something like ChatGPT would be handy, such as giving immediate responses in desperate moments. It can provide supportive and empathetic responses to help people through their emotions until they reach professional help.
