

01. Topic

Start by clearly defining what you want to write about. For instance, if you want to write about the benefits of organic farming, I'd simply begin by stating the topic: 'I'd like to write an article about the benefits of organic farming.'

02. Audience

Next, identify who the article is for. In this example, I'm targeting fitness enthusiasts and people interested in growing their food. This helps shape the language and tone of the article, making it relevant to those individuals.

03. Goal

Define the purpose or result of the article. In this case, the goal is to help readers understand why they should prioritise healthy eating and avoid harmful chemicals, ultimately aiming for a healthier lifestyle.

04. Style

Think about the writing style and tone you want to use. Here, you would choose a simple and engaging style, ensuring the article is not too formal but informative and relatable.

05. Constraints

Lastly, consider any limitations or things you want to avoid in your content. For example, I'd specify that you don't want the article to sound like a typical blog post. This keeps the writing fresh and aligned with my intent.

By following these steps, the framework helps structure the content coherently and focus.

For example, after applying tags-C, you generated an article with a strong introduction on why fitness enthusiasts are turning to organic farming, followed by sections on the benefits of chemical-free diets and the environmental impacts of organic food production.
