

thousand dollars to start a business—right out of undergraduate school. Third, I sold the business with enough profits to fund my graduate school education completely ... and never had to ask for a subsidy.

Ken's focus today is on achievement. He is a key executive with a major communications and entertainment corporation. He is also an astute investor in both commercial real estate and quality public corporations. Also like his father, Ken is a prodigious accumulator of wealth. He lives in a modest home and drives used cars.

His dad was a great role model and mentor to his son. But Ken also believes that his early experience as a busboy had a big influence on him:

I got to see the masses ... how the other people lived. I saw how hard people had to work to support their families ... long, long hours at minimum wage just to get by. Money should not be wasted ... no matter how much I earn.

10. Tell your children that there are a lot of things more valuable than money.

Good health, longevity, happiness, a loving family, self-reliance, fine friends ... if you [have] five, you're a rich man.... Reputation, respect, integrity, honesty, and a history of achievements!

Money [is] icing on the cake of life.... You don't ever have to cheat or steal ... don't have to break the law ... [or] cheat on your taxes.

It's easier to make money honestly than [dishonestly] in this country. You will never exist in business if you rip people off! Life is the long run.
