

BUSINESSES AND PROFESSIONS LIKELY TO BENEFIT FROM THE AFFLUENT

There are many. Those who are specialists in solving the problems of the affluent and their heirs should be in great demand during the next twenty years.

ATTORNEYS WHO SPECIALIZE

A father recently asked us about the ideal occupation for his son. At the time of this discussion, his son was a second-year college student with a straight-A average. How did the father respond when we suggested that his son consider becoming an attorney? He said there were too many attorneys. We replied that there were too many law school graduates. There is always a demand for high-grade attorneys. Attorneys who can generate new business are in even higher demand. The father asked about the areas of law that would be best suited for his son. We described three to him:

Estate Attorneys—Too Many?

The first area we recommended was estate law. During the ten-year period 1996–2005, attorneys' fees associated with settling estates in the $1 million or more category will total an estimated $17.1 billion (see Table 7-2). Many attorneys will also earn revenue by acting as executors or co-executors as well as administrators of estates. Attorneys will participate as executors or administrators for only a fraction of the estates worth $1 million and more, but even a fraction of the estimated $22.3 billion in executors' fees and $16.9 billion in administrators' fees translates into high profits for enlightened estate attorneys.

In essence, estate attorneys will likely generate more than $25 billion in revenue from servicing estates in the $1 million or more range during the 1996–2005 period. This figure is greater than the net income
