

The market hierarchy also changed with the entry of FIIs. Once the undisputed king of the Indian stock market, the Unit Trust of India could no longer impact prices or sentiment the way it used to. The same brokers who would queue up for hours at the UTI headquarters were now trying hard to ingratiate themselves with the new masters of the game – the FIIs. Brokers and jobbers were obsessed with what the FIIs were up to, just as they had been trying to sniff out UTI's deals till a few months ago.
