The authors would like to heap praise and accolades on Kaylee Walterbach, the Publishing Marketing Coordinator here at BiggerPockets, an outstanding writer, and a recent first-time home buyer herself (as of summer 2020). When we first handed in our draft of this book, Kaylee immediately recognized the incongruity that our differing writing styles would bring. In many nights and long weekends, she heavily edited this book to bring one unified tone to its pages, and most of the incredible jokes and references found can be sourced to her creativity. Thank you, Kaylee! We could not have done it without your fabulous guidance.

Thank you also to Katie Miller, the head of our Publishing division at BiggerPockets, for her support throughout the writing and publication process. Her ability to put processes in place and logistical skills are unparalleled. We'd be remiss to not thank the entirety of the team at BiggerPockets for their support day in and day out to help our business achieve its goals and make real estate investing accessible to more people. Even more gratitude goes out to all of the editors and designers that made this book what it is: Louise Collazo for editing, Alicia Tatone for cover design, and Wendy Dunning for page design.

In addition to these key players, we would like to thank the hundreds of individuals we've interviewed on the BiggerPockets Money Podcast, the people we have met one-on-one for coffee or drinks, those who have been lucky enough to have been Mindy's clients, and the countless thousands of folks we've interacted with online through the BiggerPockets Forums and social media. Your collective input has helped frame our philosophy and approach to investing, real estate, home buying, and life in general.

Lastly, we'd like to thank our families. Scott's beautiful fiancé, Virginia, supported him with many early edits of the book and put up with many
