

about what it is that you're striving for, and whether or not you expect achieving a particular financial goal to solve other problems. Are you relying on hitting your house deposit total to start feeling less anxious about money? Do you think that becoming debt-free will dissolve all of your money shame along with it too? Because, if so, you might find yourself disappointed when you do get there. After the initial jubilation, you might find yourself looking around, wondering what has really changed – you might feel empty or unsatisfied, and that is the very last thing you should be feeling when you hit these amazing achievements.

Ways to get off the hedonic treadmill:

- Focus on the pleasurable moments in your life – make a list and aim to fill as much of your time as possible with them.
- Find something that you love to do, that quietens the voices telling you that you aren't enough.
- Be patient. Not everything is meant to come to you right away.
- Take pleasure in the journey towards a goal, and stop putting all of the pressure on the moment that you arrive there.
