

to feel the benefit of your savings. It's also important to link your saving habit to your budgeting habit, so that you can clearly see what you can afford to save, and where you can make changes to your spending in order to save more. A habit that works for lots of people – especially those who struggle with saving motivation or those who constantly worry that they're not saving 'enough' – is to give your savings a purpose. If you're saving for multiple goals, try creating different saving accounts or pots and labelling them – i.e. 'Emergency Fund', 'Holiday', 'House Deposit', 'Christmas'. We'll talk a little more about this in Step Five.

Exercise: Get started with saving

If you've never found yourself able to save, there are a few things that you can do to make it easier for yourself:

- The first thing that you'll need to do is to review your budget, and work out the monthly or weekly amount that you'd like to begin saving – it bears repeating that this should be an achievable amount, which you can always increase in the future, once you've established the habit.
- Set up a standing order with your bank for the amount that you've calculated.
- Try to set up your transfer date for the day you get paid or the one after, if you get paid a weekly or monthly salary.
