

13

Action: Invest your first $1000

So, you've got $1000. Now what?

If you're thinking, 'Only $1000, what can I actually do with that?' The great news? The answer is a lot!

Regardless of if you are feeling proud of getting here, or doubtful about whether it's enough (maybe a bit of both), this is a moment worth celebrating. You're here. You're about to take your first step into investing. And that's something a lot of people never actually do.

But before we dive into action mode, let's take a moment to get on the same page about what this $1000 really represents, and more importantly, what it has the potential to become.

$1000 can grow into something big if invested wisely

When we think of investors, we often default to images of the ultra-wealthy. People like Warren Buffett, Jeff Bezos, Cathie Wood and Donald Trump. It can feel like investing is something reserved for people with millions, not everyday people. So, I get it, it might be hard to believe that $1000 could ever turn into anything meaningful, especially when that is the image you have in your head.

When you compare $1000 to a million or a billion dollars, yes, it feels tiny. Like trying to fill up a bathtub with 100's and 1000's, one little ball at a time. But everyone started somewhere. Every single investor, no matter how successful, had to take the first step, make their first investment. They had a first $1000, just like you do.

Remember that Paul Kelly song, From little things, big things grow? This couldn't be truer when it comes to investing. This $1000 might one day grow into a healthy portfolio — you might be the next Warren Buffett. Or,