

After you have secured your wealth from the risks to your own life (by taking a life insurance policy), the next worst thing that can happen to you is loss of your health. We all know the kind of expenses that we may have to part with, over and above the mental trauma, if you or one of your family members suffer from any health related issues and needs hospitalization. Thus, it becomes prudent to insure your and your family's health by taking a health insurance policy.

For those who are working in jobs, please do check with your employer. There are high chances that you already have an existing health insurance policy for which the premiums are either being paid by the company or being deducted from your salary.

There is a growing buzz around health insurance and there are many insurance providers you can approach. One of the primary criteria that you must keep in mind before selecting your health insurer is its claim settlement track record, over and above the premium, hospital network etc. Get around, talk to your network of friends and family and get to know 'on the ground' facts about the insurer before getting into this health agreement.

Irrespective of which provider you approach, make sure that you have the most basic floater cover for your family so that the worst scenario is taken care of.

Home Insurance

The next big threat, after life and health, to you and your financial nest egg is the risk to your home via thefts or natural disasters like earthquakes, floods, lightening, etc.

Rebuilding the house or its contents is an expensive affair and without a good home insurance, it might get extremely difficult to cope up. Apart from this, there are other benefits of having a home insurance, namely:
