There is a famous saying that if you cannot afford travel insurance, you cannot afford to travel. So, get insured before you proceed.

Of course, you can get a little prudent before signing up for your travel insurance deal by considering facts like your health insurance might have already covered you for your treatment abroad or your home insurance may have covered you for your belongings while travelling, and the fact that you may already have a personal accident cover or a rider in your existing life or health insurance policy.

Understanding the details of your existing insurance policies will help you take an informed and wise decision.

We covered most of the important insurance needs. Keep in mind that it is as important to protect your wealth, as it is to build it, if not more. If you cannot protect it, you may as well not build it.

As we come to an end of this section and before we go on to the next major section, I would suggest that you revisit the list of Wealth Creation and Wealth Protection tools that have been covered until now.

As important as it is to understand the tools and technical considerations of when to invest and how, it is equally important, if not more, to educate ourselves on the softer side of wealth accumulation.

These are certain personality traits, attitudes, behaviour and guidelines that help you as much as the technical knowledge about these investment tools, if not more.

The upcoming chapter on "Principles of Wealth Accumulation" deals in detail with this softer aspect. I have mentioned these principles based on my experience and my journey towards financial freedom. I had to bring about many changes in myself, my attitude and my outlook during this journey. Most of these principles are time tested and can be followed blindly while some of them should be followed at your discretion, though they work perfectly for wealth accumulation most of the time.
