

What do you really want from money? Why are you striving so hard to get the next promotion in your company, the next salary raise, the next contract for your newly started business venture? Why are you ready to sacrifice precious moments of your family happiness for the teleconference that you have with your client? Why would you ever get depressed on a Monday morning? Why?

Ultimately, it is all to bring in more money. But what do you want to do with that additional money that often comes at the cost of your health, family and friends. The key question is not "How" but "Why". Why do you want to be financially independent? Is it the new car that you want to buy, the new apartment that attracts you? Do you want to travel and see the world? Or is it that you simply want to spend more time with your family and children? What is it? Or is it because that's the only way you know to live life – at least that is how you see everyone around you. When I asked myself these simple but logical questions, I had a big tussle going on in my mind till I reached a satisfactory answer.

"Wouldn't it be great to have enough money so that you didn't have to worry?"

Lack of money causes so many worries in our life with regards to our future that this itself can be a very simple and strong reason to have enough money with you and become financially free. Once you reach this stage of financial freedom, you can actually start doing what you want to do in life. And stop cursing your boss, company, parents, society, country and politicians for the state of financial dependency you have always been in. This is what I truly term as financial freedom. It takes the worry out of your life and allows you to do what you enjoy the most. This could be seemingly trivial things like planting trees, teaching underprivileged children, spending time to teach your own children or just helping out your relatives, neighbours, society, country or the world. It could also be opening up your own business, venturing out for animal photography, starting a website with your latest art paintings... anything that you love doing, enjoy doing. YOU must script your life. There is no compulsion to just do a job. And why should it be? You can break free by earning enough money that sets you financially free. And to do that, you will need to accumulate enough money, a lot of it.
