

- Check for impulse purchases: Impulse buying is the mainstay of retail establishments. There are many famous sayings, which are all true, such as:
 - Never shop with an empty stomach.
 - Never shop without a checklist of items.
 - Learn to check your impulses before you go shopping.
- No Claim Bonus: Make sure you utilise the No Claim Bonus feature when you pay your premiums for vehicle insurance, health insurance or home insurance. Especially on vehicle insurance, remember that it is possible to transfer the No Claim Bonus from our old vehicle to the new one.
- Credit Card Points Encashment : If you are a mature investor, you will have one credit card. Make sure that the one you have, has a good rewards points feature. Use the credit card to pay your day to day bills and expenses. Make sure you pay the outstanding every month on time. If required, put a repeating reminder in your phone. Finally, make sure that you redeem the points regularly. Off late, I have redeemed them for great shopping vouchers, dinners and gifts . This is indeed a good saving, though only for mature investors.

All in all, you can design your own ways to reduce your expenses by eliminating waste and utilising great opportunities of cash backs, rewards, etc. Having said that, even expense reduction has only a 'MODERATE' impact on your overall wealth.

Lever 3 : Increase Your Net Income / Save on Taxes

Tax Saving may be the most talked about topic around you, but in most cases, we tend to complicate things rather than just doing simple things the right way.

In a dedicated chapter later in the book, I will give you some unconventional tax saving tips based on my experience during my financial freedom journey. No doubts, these tax saving techniques go a long way in building your wealth – faster and stronger, but I would warn you of a very simple misconception surrounding tax savings.
