

And it is not a small journey. So, it is better that we learn to enjoy this beautiful journey with our family.

Secondly, your children will be your best teachers in times of distress and the times you fall behind in your goals. There were many times when my daughters would help me to rise back from a failure by reminding me of some happy incidences which would instantly rejuvenate me. They will be your greatest strength. I have seen my children trying to save money, avoid pizzas over the weekend and do whatever they could to help me achieve what I wanted to achieve. All this is because they know how important it is for me, because I have openly shared my dreams and goals with them and they are involved in each of my successes and failures.

Thirdly and most importantly, it is imperative that you pass on whatever you have learnt to the next generation. If you work with them as a team, you do not actually need to really sit down and teach them. They will learn from you every day. I can only tell you that if your children learn how to dream, how to set goals and how to achieve them, you will cherish this journey just for this. The journey will be long, so you have to prepare yourself for it. We will see how to set smaller milestones in the upcoming section. You must celebrate these smaller milestones whenever you achieve them during the journey. This will not only add spice to your journey but your near and dear ones will eagerly await your next milestone.
